Each night, Elif dreams she is a famous designer and wakes with the desire to make the fantasy come true. In reality, she is a department store saleswoman, supporting her ungrateful family. But magic occurs when she meets the store's handsome owner Bulut and embarks on an impossible love affair.

The path of love is littered with obstacles. Bulut is heir to a textile empire and his snobbish mother Ruhsan is adamant that he will marry his more 'appropriate' childhood friend Sahika. She looks down on the poor, lower class Elif and wants to believe she is just a casual fling.

Elif's hopes of making this dream come true are also sabotaged by her inadequate unemployed father, her irresponsible brother and the family's dependence on her as the only bread winner. It is as if Elif is not entitled to experience love. But Bulut is not a man to give up easily.

Another threat to their happiness is Selami, a rich and older man obsessed with Elif. He asks her stepmother Gulendam to convince Elif to marry him, offering a new house as a reward. Mean and greedy, Gulendam accepts the proposal as she envisages a comfortable future for herself and her family.

Fearing the loss of Elif, Bulut goes to her family's house to save her from an arranged marriage. He promises they will never be separated, and they leave together. But deterring the strong-willed Selami is not so easy. Winning Elif's hand in marriage has become a matter of honor for him.

Lurking in the background is Bulut's half-brother Alaz, who has evil plans to destroy the family. He learns his father's identity from his mother just before she dies and, in his rage, hatches a malicious plan. After concealing his true identity, Alaz works his way up to being Bulut's right-hand man.

Selami's cruel resolve appears to pay off when Elif, crying out for help, is taken against her will to be with him. As she seeks ways to escape, others learn of her abduction and set out to secure her release, paving the way for her to marry the man she loves.

While Elif accepts Bulut's marriage proposal, she fears the consequences of him standing up to his family. Their union will unleash a wave of intrigues and ruses among members of the two families. The couple will have to go ahead with the wedding despite the family resistance.

When the two lovers finally marry, family members are shaken by the news and start making plans to break them up. As the sinister manipulations and plots multiply around them, Elif will be forced to make tough decisions to protect herself and Bulut. The dream threatens to become a nightmare.
